

This meeting is being recorded. Hello. Hello, hello. Hi. Yeah, yeah, Ken. Awesome. Can I ask what you do for work? I actually work in the library. Oh! Wait, library has shift work? Yeah, yeah, library has shift work. Like 11 to 6 and then another shift is like until 10, is it? It's 8 to 6 or 12 to 9. Oh, wait, the library opens so early now? No la, we have to do all the setup before they open la. Okay, got it. Ken, Ken. Thanks for joining the call. Today we are... I can pronounce your name as Junayda, right? Yeah, Ken. Awesome. Today we are mainly just looking at like where you are, how things are like. I think one of the areas that you talked about on your question there is that like there's limited budget in terms of PT and limited mental exercise. We can definitely discuss around like those areas, right? But I think the biggest question that I probably just want to figure out is where your goal is in terms of like your fitness goal and what kind of struggles you are basically going through and how we can potentially add value to you per se. Does that sound good? Yeah, Ken. Awesome. Sorry, my throat. Give me 2 seconds, let me hear my throat so that I don't sound too bad to you. Okay, Ken, Ken. Back. Okay. I think one of those things that you are sharing with me, right, is that your main goal is around trying to gain muscle and trying to lose weight. And if I'm not wrong, based on our chat, I think that was a season when you were trying to... That was a season when you were trying to lose weight and then you decided to do what's strength training, right? Yeah. Is it more because strength training is for mental health or is it more because weight loss felt like very difficult per se? Weight loss was difficult. Okay. But is it still a priority? For what? Doing strength training? Weight loss as a general goal? Yeah, still a priority. Okay, give me a bit of insight. Like what is it that's making weight loss a bit difficult for you? I'm not too sure. I think because I don't have the time to exercise. Maybe not enough sleep also. How many kids do you have? When? But how young is he or she? About 9? Okay, so you... You kind of passed the terrible stage, but they are basically now in the active noisy stage. Can I put it that way? You kind of passed the terrible stage, like the terrible 2, the active 3 or this. But they are now essentially just at a slightly more time consuming stage per se, is it? Yeah, you can say so. Oh yeah, that's true. Okay. What feels potentially hard for you as far as weight loss goes? Hmm... I think it's the timing. Tell me a bit more about timing per se. Is it just from the exercise perspective or is it also from the food perspective? Probably both. I don't have the time to exercise. Because normally my mom is the one that prepares the meals at home. Normally whatever she prepares, I'll just eat. Okay. She prepares like every single meal for you, is it? Normally for dinner. Because lunch normally is eat out. Lunch is eat out because usually it's around work timing, right? Okay, cool. What feels like... What feels like things you're willing to do in order for you to get towards a weight loss result per se? Hmm... I don't know. I have no idea. Okay. Clearly time is probably one of the things that's a bit of a struggle. It becomes more of a bonus if you can basically move. Let's not even talk about weight loss. It's probably just movement at this point. If you work in the library, do you get to move much in the library? Yeah, quite a fair bit of movement. Okay. So technically that is one area of opportunity already, right? Yeah. So there's no issue achieving 10,000 steps a day. Okay. Yeah. Quite no issue. Okay. So then what sounds like potentially we just need to get to is the optimization of nutrition. And then you can actually rely on the movement in the library. And then any other movement is basically bonus, huh? Can I put it that way? I think so. I guess so. Okay. So then technically speaking, what we might potentially be able to look into from a realistic goal perspective, right, is let me try and paint a bit of a picture to you. And then you tell me how really that will sound to you. Sounds good? Right. So essentially what sounds like we have a bit of lag in terms of information is the clarity of what feels like is doable to you. So therefore the goal of weight loss feels difficult. Fair? So then technically what we just need to do is if we can draw, we can paint a picture of where you are in terms of your movement, in terms of the amount of food you actually have access to or technically can eat, right, and basically the macronutrient split kind of a thing. And then we have to just fit it into your generalized lifestyle. You know that dinner is basically uncontrollable, whatever your mother cooks is essentially just what you have to eat. But we know that you have breakfast and lunch and perhaps some space was next, depending on how much calorie space you have, right. And if you can actually figure out what breakfast and lunch can look like. If you like strength training, if you have kids, chances are you're a relatively routine person. Which means that we just need to find food that is quite palatable to you. Like maybe need like two or three options so you don't get too bored and then you feel like everyday jeans just ask me to do this kind of nonsense. But maybe it's just more like just that few options around. Then you're like okay actually if I can do X, Y and Z then weight loss might feel a bit less scary to me. Does that sound like a picture that feels doable to you? Yeah, probably. Okay, so then what you basically just need is clarity lor. Because for a lot of people the challenge between trying to get to the goal and where they are now is just the level of clarity in the sense of like maybe I feel like I need to eat chicken breast and broccoli just so that I can do some weight and like when I think about chicken breast and broccoli it's so boring that I just want to hit whoever invented the idea of chicken breast. Whereas like, what if I tell you that, let me think. Give me some examples of food you actually eat. Pasta. Okay. Is pasta like your hot favourite? Not really lor. It's like anything that... because normally I would go to the office and then to eat lor. Okay. Yeah, so it can be like nasi padang or mee hoon soto. Ooh, mee hoon soto sounds good. You can actually eat mee hoon soto and lose weight what. Yeah, but I will tend to have two sides to it lor. Kind of like new soto is not feeling good. For me lor. Don't worry. For anybody, mee hoon soto by itself is not feeling good. Yeah. The only reason why it feels like it's finished is because we all finished the soup and then we feel like, actually okay lor. Then three seconds later you're like actually I'm very hungry already. There are ways around it. There are certain I would say it boils down to an effort question. But if we can get you clarity right. If we can get clarity on two areas. One being where are you now in terms of how much food actually do you have access to if you decide to do a weight loss. And two being what is your actual behaviour. And then we figure out how far are your actual behaviour to your food right. Then there's a pretty good chance that we can actually figure out what is the most practical way for you to approach weight loss without feeling like you need to eat chicken breast and broccoli every day. Yeah. Every time I say chicken breast I also bought. Yeah. You think that sounds like something you are willing to look into? Can give it a try. Okay. Cool. Okay. So that sounds like one of those things we can actually explore per se. The next worthy question I possibly would need to discuss with you is clearly budget. Because everyone knows that sadly this is not going to be for free. But usually I'll just do a price drop and tell you how much is it. And then I'll just look at like whether that's something that feels reasonable to you. But because budget is one of those conversations you set out earlier right. This is one of those cases where I'd rather know about your budget first and then I look at what can be best worked together. Then I give you my price drop. And the reason for this is not because I'm trying to hide my price but rather I'm trying to meet expectations together. Does that make sense? Yeah. I understand. So with that said, are you okay sharing with me what your budget looks like? Okay. First thing first what does it comprise of? So there's a few directions we can go with this right. The earlier part that I talked about that would be part of what I do as an initial consultation. Meaning to say I basically sit down with you. I have a conversation with you to understand your current exercise, nutrition and lifestyle routines. Super casual conversation right. Then I map out everything into data. So this data should tell us a few things. One what is your current resting metabolic rate like? What's your energy output and your energy input? Meaning to say how much calories can you basically eat right. And then based on your current habits then you are at a weight gain, weight loss or weight maintenance trend. And how many days does it actually take for you to gain weight, lose weight or maintain your weight? Along with all those, so those are your numbers this data information. Along with that right, we might also be looking at things like nutrition and environment. Like for example some cases is because of job right that causes them to overeat. Yeah, so let me explain sometimes it could be because lunch time, typical lunch time for most of us is like maybe 12 o'clock. And then typical dinner time for most of us is like maybe between 6 to 7. If you end work at 6 then you travel home then you eat right. Could be like 7, 7.30, 8 o'clock. So if you think about it that is about a 6 to 7 hour difference. That's very long. So typically after you finish a normal meal right your hunger level usually be about 3 to 4 hours. And then the longer it takes for you to fulfill your stomach the hungrier you will get and the more likely you are to overeat. So that is one of those cases of nutrition environment that we are talking about. If we can actually detect and catch these nutrition environments early what we can actually do right is to put in a strategy. Meaning to say let's put a small stack here or let's focus on a certain nutrient that will actually help you to stay less hungry for a while. Yeah. Then in that case right it makes the journey a bit more sustainable in a sense where your physical behaviour is not causing you to feel like... How should I say? We try to eliminate the physiological part of the story. We need to say behaviourally speaking even though work is like this it doesn't become the reason why you might end up eating too much during certain timing. Yeah. Because to be fair if we are talking about how we got to the point of it again usually it just means we overate somewhere. So then the more we can actually control the overcompensations the more likely we are to lead ourselves to a slightly more successful journey. Yeah. So we tackle what I like to call the psychophysio-social environment early. Then we can put in those strategies right. Once you put them in you are more likely to succeed because you have lesser cravings you have better decision making processes you feel full a bit longer. Yeah. So those are like how we try to tackle things from a nutrition environment perspective. Then also you talk about strength training right. So you are doing strength training for mental health reasons I'm guessing? Like just so that you can feel a bit better? Or is it also because you have strength goals? Trying out la. I'm still trying out in strength training la. Okay cool. So when you go for different training the way you eat matters in the sense of like your pre-performance and your post-performance food they are slightly different. When you are talking about pre-performance you are basically eating to fuel. When you are talking about post-performance you are basically talking about recovery and most people talk about protein la. But sometimes it might be more than just that. So that's where we look at like whether or not there's a need to even look into the question of optimization. Especially let's say you only go strength training after work and the only thing you ate was lunch then how does that affect your training performance and all that? So those are also potential conversations we can open up to. The nicest thing to note is that when we talk about these different things. Number one, we get to open up the key windows of opportunity immediately. Meaning to say what do we need to do in order to get you to where you want to be. Number two, the way that this works is that all the conversations are based on your history. So all the changes are also based on your history. So all the tweaks that's done doesn't feel like oh I need to do a 180 degree turn. Essentially all we just need to do is to understand where you are. You just make the smallest tweak that can create the biggest impact. Yeah. Then essentially it's all about execution already. Yeah. How does that sound? Interesting ask. Yeah. I understand that that's not an approach that most people take. Yeah. I'm not even sure if you ever heard of anyone doing it this way before or not. But yeah that's the general approach that we typically take. It's a combination of physiology and nutrition and it takes a lot of biochemistry understanding to get there. So that's basically like my entire background in both sports science and sports nutrition. Yeah. Basically just combine all the information received over the years of both work and studies that I've done and then I make it into a very well it sounds complicated but really at the end of the day it's a relatively simple framework per se. Yeah. Then after that it's really just about applying it your way. So then that's how we try to make the journey a bit more palatable, a bit more sustainable. It doesn't feel like very scary. Yeah. Does it sound very doable to you so far? So far I think it's probably okay. Okay. So that's the initial consultation. The later part right in January you know what after I go through initial consultation I feel like the roadmap is extremely clear. I feel like Jace is a fit for me. I feel like he might be the one to might be able to guide me through my journey. Then the next part will basically be the support part. So I generally don't charge a session by session. I generally charge a month by month basis kind of a fee and typically we charge that fee right then we just collect upfront fee. Generally for that one I don't have number one I don't really have a lot of price point to share with you upfront today probably because I don't have enough data to determine. But number two also because like the way that this works is that we basically review on a almost 24-7 basis essentially it just means that like anytime you need to ask a question we review within 24 hours. Anytime we need monitoring we just teach you how to track. So it makes the journey a bit simpler for you and then all you need to worry about is execution. That part will be a bit harder to share with you price point on a very solid level. But with all that said that's the general features and benefits you more or less need to know for now. Can we go back to the budget question? Since I think that's one of the questions that I probably need to understand from your end first then after I can review my price points and where we can actually negotiate to a win provided that of course you actually are committed and want to do this. I tried to commit but I don't know how much the commitment level can be. What is your trigger point and reason for wanting to get healthier for yourself? Because of age. How young are you? Forty. Okay, forty still young. Welcome to the big four but forty still young. What about age is making it important for you? I think it's the age that makes it important for me. That's one too. Get healthier per se. Yeah, actually age. I mean there's definitely benefits of looking into it right now especially when we're talking about the age perspective. Like for example just purely based on the general stats of how things are going right. As people grow older the organs in general are getting bigger. So then there's a few areas where it gets a bit more dangerous. Metabolic health risk of course and then of course you have your bone health. For females they are a bit more susceptible to it. Then of course you have a few others that's more health marker related like injuries and whatnot. So definitely those are areas worth looking into early. And of course in the long term especially because you do have a kid then it becomes even more important to take care of yourself so that you can also take care of them and of course your job. So I totally hear you on that because I mean the same point as you because we all live in Singapore. This is a very modular thing. But was there a four part figure that you were already considering when you're looking at budget? Four part figure maybe hundred per month. Okay, hundred per month you're essentially just looking at any sort of services you were looking at when you were talking about hundred per month? Services? What kind of services are you talking about? When you were ballparking hundred a month were there any specific value or services that you were looking at when you were saying okay I'm willing to pay hundred dollars a month to x, y and z or services when it comes to your health and fitness? No. Okay cool. Let me share with you our prizes. Let me see which one I should share first. Let me talk about the initial consultation one first. The initial consultation is actually the whole point of it is to give you clarity. Clarity in the sense of where are you right now? What are you going at? Whether upwards, downwards or maintenance? The things that we can actually do to get you out of upwards, if it's upwards, for you to go downwards, if it's not downwards yet. And the key areas of modification so that you can actually get to your journey in a very doable manner. I get that doable is subjective but for the most part it's really about applying strategies at the right places. Then of course you get clarity in the sense where you see the big picture but you also are able to get one to three simple steps that you can literally just apply straight away right and it will make an impact to your weight loss. So that one is two hundred and ten dollars. It's a 90 minute session and it comes with a 100% money back guarantee. Which means to say that if let's say you really decide to do it and then you're like, you know what, James sounds like he's just a scam. He says something wrong. You can just tell me. Don't even tell me. You can just ask for me. Fine, I'll give you a hundred percent. No questions asked. So that's the initial consultation. The nice thing to know is that working long term with us means that the initial consultation is already included into the long term part of the story. Our services for long term is definitely out of your budget. The sense where it's between three to five hundred dollars per month. Yeah, and generally we do upfront basis collection in terms of the fees. We can discuss for installments and there are negotiation points but if we ever do discuss about these negotiations right, it does come with a few conditions. The most important one being that we have to feel like we are a good fit and you actually are. Of course this is only after post-consultation that we will discuss but like we feel like we are a good fit for each other in terms of like if you're like, okay James sounds like somebody I can't who's willing to support me and I feel like I can trust you to support me. And number two, you actually do need to put in the work of saying, okay you know what, I'm just going to commit to this x amount of time. Because if we go into a negotiation then the point of the negotiation is that like you are essentially talking about what am I willing to put down on to make sure that I get myself to success. The nice thing to know is that we are not going to ask you to eat chicken breast and broccoli, we're also not going to tell you to work out five times a week. So those are like irresponsible words per se. But for us it's more about making sure that this journey is in a doable manner and of course like with effort it comes with a lower timeline but these are all trackable by numbers so that you feel like okay actually these are trends that I can look at as long as I'm measuring certain things and doing certain actions that I know for sure that like going in the direction I want it to. How does that sound so far? Okay, sounds more like a tailored program la. It's super personalized yes. So those are my main points at least for the initial consultation. Does that sound like something you're interested to embark on? I'm always here first la for the consultation. Sorry, say again. I'm always here first for the consultation. Okay, yeah so the consultation is typically done in my office. It's at International Plaza. Time is not too much of a worry in the sense that typically between Tuesday to Thursday I do work all the way up to 8pm. So if you need to travel down and you need a bit of time to travel over it's not too much of a worry because you do stay up until after hours. Yeah, so if you're actually interested and open to the idea of the initial consultation right then I can actually just put you in now. So this is the 200 and 10? Can I consider first? Is budget the main consideration here? Yes, correct. Is this money you cannot spare out because you'll be in a very tight situation immediately? Yeah, I'm trying not to at the moment la because we're in and we're travelling also. Oh, exciting and very expensive. Yes, correct. Okay, what's at stake for you? I mean I'm happy for you to consider and then you can come back to me. There's no worries about it. Let me think. Aside from finances, is there any other concerns you have? Probably what takes place after the consultation la. Like I say, it really depends on how much I can submit to the program. Let's say the entire way we actually program the whole thing is that it's done in a way where we make it super simple for you. We make sure that the actionables are mutually agreeable. The way that it's done is that we talk to you, you share your information like how you're basically eating and then we make simple tweaks according to the way you're eating. And then if something is not doing well, then we just tell you where are ways we can actually make improvements and it has to be based on agreement basis where it's not just me saying okay I think I can do this, it's coming from like yes I think I can do this too. So if that's the case, then do you think the commitment level will go up? I really need to try it la. I cannot say much. If you try something like this and then you felt like commitment was an issue? Yeah, correct. Okay, can you tell me more about that experience? There's a tendency to fall back, then it's like a few mistakes, then fall back again, then it's like I mean it's okay for me with that but in the long run, I eventually will give up la. Because I cannot remain consistent on it. What made the consistency difficult? Most of the time, it's the time factor la. Okay, which part of the time factor make it difficult? Time factor, I don't have much choice for it la. I mean if you like, when it comes to like exercising yeah. But we already agreed that actually you just need to work on the steps right, so then we actually just need to focus on the nutrition which means that even if time becomes an issue for trying to like find more time to exercise, technically you already have the library box ma. So then for the most part, we don't actually need to focus on the movement now, we just need to focus on the nutrition. Does that feel like something that feels a bit easier to commit to? I mean, I always give it a try la. So what would become a challenging block for you when you are talking about it from the nutrition end? Nutrition, I don't know what is expected on it la. Okay, so maybe I can give you a bit of insight of how we actually work from the nutrition end. I work with extremely busy people all the time, I'm part of the extremely busy people crowd right. So to give you an insight in general, I work about 11-12 hours a day which is also part of the very busy crowd la and I usually only have about maximum of 2 hours in the entire day to eat. So somebody like me will not spend 2 hours in the kitchen. Really right? And I'm guessing that you are probably like that too, you probably wouldn't want to spend that kind of time in the kitchen too. So how we actually optimize this part of the story right, is we capitalize on convenience, we find skill sets, we generally want 3 skill sets. Eating at home, eating outside and emergency food. Emergency food means times when you don't have time to go and cook, don't have time to find the right nutrients but you still have the nutrients with you. So that's how we actually try to optimize the nutrition end because the truth of the matter is we are all very busy. So it's very difficult to expect yourself to be able to eat in what people call the standard manner of eating clean whatsoever. So then how we actually solve this problem is to not just book on the chicken breast and broccoli go standard answer, we also work around the strategies that maybe are what you call your tier 2, tier 3 levels of healthiness and then we find food that is in the middle of palatable but also in the balanced diet. Or at least close to the goals that you can actually work with. Does that feel like it's a bit easier to commit to? I mean, you can always try la, never try, never know. Ya, no la but like if you're only trying then you might not be putting enough skin in the game right, then becomes a bit of a problem in the sense where like when it comes to your health and fitness goal, I'm not saying you need to put 100% in but there needs to be some skin inside where you're like okay you know what I'm committed and let's do it. Because do you agree with me that if let's say we're always to get it from a let's try count for perspective then you dig inside your toe maybe two weeks later you're like the results not coming but like the results not coming therefore I feel like you know what let's just fall back. Whereas to come in from the perspective of okay this sounds like a doable plan, we're already optimizing it to as simple as possible even if I got no time I can also get the nutrients. And you know what this sounds like somebody who's empathetic enough to actually make sure that like the journey is um let me phrase this well, the journey is doable for me. Then all I actually need to do is to cancel away the thinking, I just do the execution and as long as it feels sustainable I just move forward with it. Yeah. Do you think that would be a good way for you to actually go in and not feel like you just need to dig your toes in and then it feels like somewhere where you can feel like okay you know what this is something I can put a bit more skin in. Probably. Yeah. Because this way like I mean at the end of the day you are working with a budget and I only work with people who are well they are willing to put in a bit of commitment into it right. We don't want to waste each other time and more importantly I don't want to make you feel like you are wasting your money right. It's super unfair for you right. So then if we are going to do this and especially if we might potentially go into a negotiation conversation then I rather make sure that like before you even go into any of those conversations we set in some good boundaries where I shouldn't get you to do anything restrictive but in return you the things that we can agree on and as long as it sounds like it's very doable then we just commit together and if it's too difficult then you have that transparency and that openness to just you know what James is too difficult can we find something easier to make it less crazy. I hope. I think most of my methods are not crazy. I'm really thinking right. Every Singaporean can do. Yeah let's just put it that way. Yeah. But there must be some level of commitment for sure because if it's being told then it's very easy to get out right. So you got exit strategy and for health and fitness is one of those things where I cannot help you to work out, I cannot help you to eat and stuff like that right. So the only thing I can do is be a partner and provide you reasonable steps that is super doable. Yeah. You think that's something that you feel like okay you know what this sounds like potential conversation. We need to go into a potential next step that I'm willing to actually put my foot in. Okay great. I know you're a bit concerned budget wise. The nice thing to know is as long as we're talking about next steps also right. I mean there's two nice things to know. One being that you can always just say you know what I'm just going to get refund so that I can save my money. Initial consultation is very very doable. And to be honest if you are that tight right. You can literally just tell me this is helpful but I really don't have money to pay and I would really just not charge you. Because the start of our company is number one we work with integrity in the sense where you just make sure that the people that we are working with we make sure we find them the solution right.

And number two we don't try and work with people and try and close a sale while knowing that they cannot sleep at night after closing that sale. Like it should pinch you but you shouldn't feel like you just lost an arm and a leg. Even though to be fair if you lose an arm and a leg you lose quite a bit of weight. I just thought about this. I had this idiot doctor client who told me that the fastest way to get a person to lose weight is to amputate a person's limb. And she will lose 25% of his weight immediately. That's terrible. The clients I generally attract are people with blues. But at the end of the day if I really go into the conversation of the money part right. Initial consultation in general is fixed but if you really feel like that's a sum that you have challenges facing just be very open about it. Because at this point the biggest question worth looking at is if today I don't embark on this what other options do I have? And are they potentially practical for me? Is this person willing to actually put in the time and attention to take care of me? And honestly I don't really know the options that puts down the level of care and attention we put down. And I'm not trying to brag. For the most part we really only focus on solution. So if budget really is an issue happy to discuss as long as we put down a few prerequisites and conditions that is largely around commitment and being the right fit. Because to us the most important thing we care about is whether the person is committed and everything else is about our responsibility. Because if you put in the work then my responsibility is to make sure that we don't baby the process for you but we make sure that it's reasonable and sustainable for you. Do you think that's a good way to actually start that partnership? Okay cool. So tell you what why don't we actually just put in the initial consultation first. You already know my numbers in terms of both the fall part and the initial anyway. And you already know how to hack your way out if you really need to just give me a way. I really won't blame you. I'm okay with it. I actually wait with people's initial consultation anyway. So being super upfront and transparent with you here. And only with the one being this transparent is because if you are really very committed to the idea of let's actually make a change for myself and maybe because of whatever age reasons you have that commitment right. Then I'm happy to work with you. The only real requisite I have for people to work with me on a selection basis is that part. And then everything else is really just because from a financial perspective all of us need to eat. And therefore it's just an exchange of trust. Like you pay me and we exchange of trust. We might really go into a negotiation conversation. And all I ask out of that is your openness and transparency. Because as you know this is a very personalised thing right. Which means that your honesty is going to be very appreciated. And in return of course I will be very honest with you without being an asshole. Because I don't work with assholes and I think you don't like assholes anyway. We are so allergic to it right. That my company literally has a no drama policy. So we are so serious about it right. That we tell people that there's no politics inside this company. You want you talk to us. If not then you just don't show your identity. So I work with, my whole team is introverts. And they are like, do you like cats? Have you seen cats? Why am I asking? Of course you've seen cats before. So you know that they are very shy right. They will just hide in one corner right. That's my whole team. So the moment they sense drama they will hide already. Then I'm like shit, cannot work. So can you just ask what company is this? My company's name is Performance Nutrition Private Limited. You will never find any information about it. If you try and search Performance Nutrition Private Limited. Not because we are shady. But because the brand that we run is Boss Nutrition is James. So I run my own company. In that sense I am boss. I don't like to say that. Because no matter how many years it gets right I will never get used to being called boss. But yes I am the main decision maker. You are literally just talking to the main decision maker. So everything you are hearing the final decision maker is also me. So everything is very transparent when you talk to me. Everything when you talk about the whole consultation, the process and everything is made in such a way that yes there is going to be a bit of a pinch on your end and there is going to be some level of commitment and investment from your side. But it comes on equal level in the sense where we respect your commitment. We take it very seriously and we put down the same level of skin as you. And then of course everything else is a partnership. Because if you ask me I think that's a pretty good way to start a partnership. Do you think so? So then you got shitload of guarantees to make sure that the partnership is really very fair to you one. And I really don't know a lot of companies that put down 100% money back guarantee. We do it because we really want to protect you as the customer anyway. Do you feel comfortable enough to just set down a date with me for initial consultation? Is it within this month? It doesn't have to be within this month but what I want to do is to just lock down a date so that we can lock down a commitment. So it's Tuesday to Thursday? We are most likely going to meet after hours right? Meaning you're probably going to be talking about evenings right? Then Tuesday to Thursday is probably what you're looking for. Late afternoon or late afternoon? Late afternoon I do have Friday. But if you're looking at night then normally Tuesday to Thursday is the safer ones. Okay I need to see my schedule again after I will let you know again. When can you let me know by? By the end of next weekend. Because your schedule comes at once every two weeks is it? Okay because I'm carrying leave also. So I need to manage my leave then I have some my mum's hospital appointment also to go. Okay but do you feel comfortable about this conversation so far? Yeah so far so good. Do you feel comfortable about entering into that partnership with me so far? Yeah so far okay. Cool. So what I'll do right is I am going to let me think. You are saying by next week right? Wah a bit long leh. I'll try by mid of next week yeah. Okay. Mid Friday already right? Yeah mid Friday already. Okay can I do a check in with you maybe on Wednesday? Yeah can. Okay. Do you feel good so far? So far okay. Okay. So far so good la. Okay. Yeah. No la you must feel good la. As in in general before you even try and commit anything right the important thing especially when talking about working with a coach is you actually need to feel good about the vibes you feel like this is the character feels good and everything. Yeah and I mean for us it's the same right? If you think that the client is not somebody we want to work with we probably entered a call 30 minutes ago. Because to be fair you want to work with people who are like-minded right? You don't want to work with like we said we don't want to work with assholes. So right cannot find a nicer work to do than that. Yeah so yeah la as long as you feel like okay you know what I'm not very sure about how consistent I am but I committed to the journey I feel like this person is a good fit. We sound like we are probably going to vibe well together. Let's just come for the initial consultation first. Money wise you already know mine first right? So at the back end if you need to talk to your family your husband whatsoever go ahead. Right but during the initial consultation I would definitely be asking the long term is something you are interested in the discussion. So it would be good if you have a more practical of like what you are considering. Yeah and then if you need to talk about installments and everything we can discuss. Yeah but the one thing I don't want you to feel like is like you are being pushed to buy something per se because that's not how we work. Yeah our entire agenda is just we sound like we have a problem. We sound like we can solve it. And if you go about helping you then at least like we support you so feel good about it. Yeah that's how we want to start that relationship la. Sounds good? Yeah so far so good. Okay great so what I'll do is I'll put down a note to make sure that I reach out to you on Wednesday 13th and from there we if you can reach out to me and let me know a few days then we good la. Yeah. Ken awesome. Alright. Okay you're smiling means you're happy with what we are talking about today. Yeah no it's important it's really very important because you just want to enter a good relationship especially when you are talking about like this kind of personalised partnership. Yeah we have been at the back end of unfortunate skins before we don't like how we feel and we don't want people to feel that way. So to us that's important. Yeah it's a two way la. For sure. Everything we do has to be a two way street and everything we make sure we do is in a as supportive to you as possible manner. Okay thank you for your time. I'll reach out to you again on Wednesday. If you do reach out to me. Alright Ken thank you. Bye. Bye.
